MONEY $ense

Information and activities for parents and children to learn together and make sense of their money.

Protecting your child from identity theft

Children's Social Security Numbers can be used to apply for credit cards and more—and it can take years for parents to discover the fraudulent activity. You can take proactive steps to protect your children's information—and their credit:

Ask questions.

Never hand over your children's personal information, including Social Security Numbers, until you have asked what it will be used for and are satisfied with the answers.

Shred old documents.

Just like you would your own, shred unnecessary documents that contain your children's personal information.

Secure important documents.

Keep your children's Social Security cards, birth certificates and other important documents secured in a safety deposit box or a secure location in your home.

Add children to your fraud coverage.

Coverage for Dupaco's Family ID Restoration fraud-recovery coverage extends to dependent children under age 21 who live with the account holder and dependent children who are full-time students.

Review websites your child uses.

Websites and apps that target kids must have a privacy policy, according to the Federal Trade Commission. If you can't find the policy or how the website or app will use children's information, don't let your kids use it.

Watch for warning signs.

Know the warning signs of child identity theft, which include calls from creditors, suspicious mail and credit card applications for your children.

Contact Dupaco immediately.

If you suspect your child's identity has been compromised, contact your credit union immediately. Dupaco can help with viewing a credit history and provide direction on how to dispute information with the credit bureaus.
